The department of Ariège borders the departments of Haute-Garonne (to the north and to the west), Aude and Pyrenees-Orientales (to the east), as well as bordering Andorra and Spain to the south.

The Ariège department was created from a former part of the Aquitaine region, this area has retained many aspects of the Gascon culture. Foix is the major town of the department. Pamiers and Mirepoix are also worth a visit for culture and entertainment. The region also has lots of pretty villages and countryside, it is a beautiful rural department.

Ariege nestles in the Pyrenees mountains and offers besides an outstanding flora, many lizards, marmots and bears. More than 50% of the territory is mountainous and forests cover about 491,000 hectares. Even if Ariege belongs to the least populated French departments (140,000 inhabitants), the nature there is amongst the most unspoiled of the country.

The Ariegois (Ariege's inhabitants) are rightly proud of their department, the soil is very fertile and allows for intense farming activity. The locals enjoy keeping many old traditions alive, especially farming techniques.
