The department of Yvelines is in the Paris - Ile de France region and is the eighth largest department of France in terms of population but by no means in size. It hosts the amazing city of Versailles which developed around its famous chateau at the time of King Louis XIVth.

The Yvelines department is adjacent to Val d'Oise, Hauts-de-Seine, Essonne, Eure-et-Loir and Eure. The Seine River is part of the Parisian agglomeration, but the rest of the area remains rural and has some stunning woodland.

The countryside of Yvelines is an ideal location for holidays and is within easy reach of Paris for business. Culture, the Palace of Versailles, sport and tranquility are on offer in abundance.

The France Natural History Museum is the largest history museum in the world. It is located in the Palace of Versailles. Of course there are many other museums in Paris that are equally 'not to be missed'.
