The Town of Santarém, Portugal is along the Camino Portugués and is a charming stop on your journey. Regardless of how much time you spend here, you should at the very least see the Portas do Sol. The view from the citadel over the Río Tejo is one that is not to be missed! You could even take your morning pastry here to eat on your walk out of town, as the Camino brings you right up to the park!

Santarém is the lively capital of the Lezíria do Tejo sub-region (Lisboa e Vale do Tejo region). Unlike the Alentejo, this district is formed by vast, green plains that stretch to the horizon, often flooded by the river Tagus. While horse and bull breeding are amongst some of the region's most proud traditions, Santarém is particularly famous for its bullfights and annual National Agricultural Fair.

Praça Barão da Batalha (Batalha's Baron Square)

This square is one of Abrantes' most popular spots and has become a favourite meeting point for visitors due to its dynamic commerce and constant liveliness – aspects that make this location one of the most attractive in the city.

ABOUT THE AREA

Standing on a ridge above the River Tagus, the historic town of Santarém is one of the oldest and most intriguing places in the centre of Portugal. Known as Scallabis by the Romans, it was once one of the strongest fortresses in the country thanks to its prominent position overlooking the extensive Ribatejo plains.

For a long time, Santarém was a thriving royal residence and impressive tourneys would take place along the town's riverbanks. It was during one of these grand occasions that the 16-year-old royal prince Afonso, son of King João II and heir to the throne, was tragically killed when he fell from his horse in 1491.

Santarém has managed to preserve many traces of its original ramparts and the old town climbs up by narrow alleyways, staircases and elegant houses to the Portas do Sol, a veritable belvedere above a vast green and fertile landscape.

Today, Santarém is an important agricultural centre, popular for its annual ten-day fair at the beginning of June, as well as a large-scale gastronomy festival at the end of October.

There's much to see in Santarém, most notably the Seminary, once a Jesuit college. Standing on the site of the ancient royal palace, this magnificent building has endless corridors covered with azulejo panels depicting hunting scenes, idylls in the Watteau manner, naval battles and Eastern landscapes with turbaned figures.

The remains of the venerable Franciscan monastery are impressive and stand as one of the finest examples of the Portuguese architecture of the Burgundian period.

Among the town's churches are that of Marvila, with its attractive porch in the Manueline style and lovely 17th-century diamond-patterned azulejo tile panels, the Misericórdia with its façade decorated with rock work and São Estevão (known as the Church of the Miracle) which features some very rare 16th-century azulejo tiles.

Built in the Gothic style, the 14th-century Graça Church has a spectacular rose window carved from a single stone. It also contains the tomb of Portuguese navigator Pedro Álvares Cabral, the first European to reach Brazil in 1500. He died in Santarém in 1520.

Founded by King Sancho in the 13th century, the convent church of São Francisco has a fine west door and a Gothic cloister.

The town's archaeological museum covers the Roman and Moorish periods of the city's history and includes the elaborate tomb of Duarte de Meneses, killed in an affray with the Moors in Morocco in 1464. The walls of the ancient Portas do Sol citadel afford an inspiring view of the surrounding Ribatejan landscape.

At Almoester, 10 km due west of Santarém, is the restored Bernardine convent of Santa Maria. Founded in 1289, it has a 14th-century carved wooden crucifix on a lateral altar and some exceptional late-17th century Baroque gold woodwork.
