ABOUT THE AREA

Once a tiny fishing harbour, Latchi, Cyprus has grown considerably over the last 10 years, now boasting a large marina, yet it still retains its unique charm. It is situated on the north west of the island close to the unspoilt Akamas peninsula. Latchi is named after the old Greek word for water hole or well – 'lakki'. Many years ago, before tourism came to Cyprus, local farmers would bring their livestock down from the hills en route to market and stop for a coffee at Latchi. There were several 'lakkis' available for their animals to get fresh water...and so the little town got its name.

Legend has it that Aphrodite fell in love with Adonis in Latchi, and romance is still on the agenda at this easy-going fishing village on the northwest coast of Cyprus. The harbour-side restaurants are perfect for cosy suppers, while rambling nature walks take you into the pretty countryside, and the quiet beach means plenty of uninterrupted lazing.

The beach at Latchi is a mile-long stretch of sand and pebble, framed by forested hills and pleasantly crowd-free. The water here is warm and shallow, and there are plenty of sunloungers and umbrellas for hire. And for those who want a real hit of sand, Polis is only three kilometres away.

Latchi is on the doorstep of Akamas National Park – an area of outstanding natural beauty. It's got over 50 well-signposted nature trails that cover gentle walks and longer hikes that take you through a landscape of carob and olive trees, and pine and juniper forests. Some of the best trails are on the road out to Polis near Aphrodite's Bath.

Just 45 minutes away is Paphos. The ancient capital of Cyprus wears its history well, with a huge Roman amphitheatre, 1,000-year-old underground tombs and the famous Paphos Mosaics – a fabulous showcase of Greek mythology. Even the harbour, throbbing with lively bars and cafés, has an Ottoman castle on the side.
