The city of Silves was once the capital of the Algarve and ceased to be so when the River Arade silted up. But this wasn't the only moment in history when Silves played a key role in the region. At the time of the Moors, Silves was an important centre of government, trade and culture and extended its influence throughout the south of the Iberian Peninsula.

There are many Islamic remains in Silves and they are very well documented and preserved in its museums and cultural centres, which are definitely worth a visit. Silves has beaches, specifically in Armação de Pêra, but it's not for the beaches that this town is becoming increasingly famous and visited.

Located in the interior of the Algarve, a few kilometres from the sea, Silves is attracting more and more tourists who are looking for a different Algarve from the one you can visit in the more mass-market tourist destinations. In Silves, you can discover an Algarve full of history, culture and authenticity.

Another curious detail of this town is the existence of a reddish-coloured rock in the vicinity, the famous Grés de Silves, a rock that was used in the construction of its castle, which has red tones that give it a very peculiar appearance, different from the rest of Portugal's castles.
